Seeks Senate Seat

Bertram F. Dodson

Bertram F. Dodson, Campbell County businessman and farmer, has formally announced that he will run for the State Senate in the November general election as an independent.

Dodson, 44, filed his declaration of candidacy and supporting petitions with the County Clerks of the Circuit Court in each county Tuesday.

He will run in the new 18th Senatorial District, comprising the Counties of Appomattox, Buckingham, most of Campbell, Charlotte, Halifax and Prince Edward, and the City of South Boston.

No incumbent senator is seeking re-election in the district. Senator James W. Davis of Amherst, who represents Appomattox, Buckingham and Campbell, and Senator J. D. Hagood ofClover, who represents Charlotte, Halifax, Prince Edward, and South Boston, are both retiring this year.

Dodson will be opposed by Delegate Howard P. Anderson of Halifax, who declared his candidacy last spring shortly after Senator Hagood said he would not run again. In May, when no one else had announced for the seat, Anderson was designated the Democratic nominee by action of the seven city and county Democratic chairmen of the district.

In a prepared statement declaring his candidacy, Dodson said: "I have decided to seek the new Senate seat to provide the people of this district a clear choice between constructive, conservative action on the important issues facing Virginia, as contrasted with the negative reaction typified by the record of my opponent during 12 years in the General Assembly.

In a new district, comprising counties which have never been grouped together for representation before, I believe that a senator who is independent of party or faction will be better able to provide the kind of independent representation that will best serve the vital interests and well-being of all our people.

I have, therefore, determined to run independently of any political party or nomination. In making this decision, I have been greatly encouraged by spontaneous offers of widespread support - from Democrats and Republicans alike- throughout the district.

Since I' m not obligated to any party or group, I can best serve all the people rather than any special group."

Dodson has worked with and held office in a broad range; farming, business, government, fraternal and civic promotions. He served eight years on the Campbell County Board of Supervisors, and as president of Virginia Counties Association giving him valuable experience of the needs in local government.

Dodson is a member of the Masonic Lodge, Shriner, Ruritan, Lions Club, Elks Lodge and other civic and community organizations serving in a variety of capacities. He is a member and serves on the board of Deacons of Quaker Memorial Presbyterian Church. Dodson is married to the former Dorothy Hayes of Lynchburg, a former school teacher in Campbell County public schools. They have three children, Bertram, Jr., 18, a freshman student at V.P.I., Karen, 17, and Bonny, 11, students in Campbell County public schools.

AMERICAN

Waiting Child

It has been estimated that there are a minimum of 40,000 black children available for adoption nationwide and that the total of all the potentially available children who are of healthy, white infants may approach 200,000.

Susan, age 5, Mary, age 7, and Walter, age 8 are but three of those children in Virginia. Abandoned by their parents almost three years ago and now having lived in three different foster homes, they are what is commonly referred to as "Hard to place" which too often translates into no adoptive home available. This means that they will grow up without the benefit of a permanent home.

Recognizing that these children exist and at the same time that there are families who would be most happy to provide that home, the Children's Home Society of Virginia is embarking on a special program to locate these children and families for them. Operating on the belief that no child is unadoptable, current efforts are being made to eliminate this backlog.

A home was found for Susan, Mary and Walter, but this is only a beginning. More children will follow and benefit as does society when children are given the opportunities afforded by a permanent home.
